This can be done one of two ways: Ice Bath - Simply set your pot into a sink filled with ice water. Use a wort chiller - Insert chiller into your wort. Run cold water from your tap through the chiller and out to the sink. A wort chiller is the most effective way, but either will get you the desired results.

One of the best ways to reduce the likelihood of your beer getting contaminated is to chill the wort as fast as possible, dropping the temperature from that dangerous range that evil bacteria just love. Many beginning homebrewers accomplish this by submerging the brew kettle in an ice bath in either a large tub or the bathtub.

Plenty of yeast left to carbonate after a 2 week cold crash and finings. I do that all the time with my Tripels and Blondes. After I add sugar to bottling bucket and rack beer I stir gently for 30 seconds, cover and let sit for 15 minutes before bottling to ensure even distribution of sugar. Yields clear beer with minimal sediment

Considering how beer is 90% water, it’s only fair to say that your brewing water can make or break your beer quality. The six water ions to look out for are: magnesium, sulfate, sodium, calcium, chloride, and bicarbonates. The total alkalinity of your brewing water can affect the mash pH and allow you to make acid adjustments.

Monitor the speed that the beer transfers into the bottling bucket by pinching and releasing the siphon with your fingers (or use a specialty clamp). The beer should not splash into the bucket; it should gently rush into it. Place the bottling bucket on the counter, attach the siphon and run the other end of the siphon into a bottle.
