@Telemachus: It's a fair point, but it can be argued either way. The main reason I didn't mention it is that the sed example in the OP's question doesn't make backups, so it seems superfluous here. The other reason is that I've never actually used the backup functionality (I find automatic backups annoying, actually), so I always forget it's there.

How can I replace each newline (\n) with a space using sed?
